

All A-Twitter

ONE CYCLIST'S TMI IS ANOTHER'S LOL. By Emily Furia Illustrated by Leo Espinosa

Because texts, e-mail, instant messaging and Facebook updates are no longer enough to keep us all connected, we now have Twitter, a microblogging service that allows users to provide their friends with a continual stream of haiku-like status updates ("having chalupa at Taco Bell!"). Excessive? Perhaps. ■ But one of Twitter's great charms is its unlikely embrace by pro cyclists. Lance Armstrong gave new Twitterer Levi Leipheimer a shout-out on one of his own tweets during the Tour of California, and the three-time ToC champ amassed 8,000 followers within 24 hours. Now you can not only find out which Spring Classics your favorite riders are targeting, but also be alerted the moment the first drops of Belgian mud spatter their pasty-white calves. So what kind of a fan are you? Test the depths of your obsession with our quiz.
